MAN-HOURS DEVOTED TO
MAIN DEPARTMENTS OF INTELLIGENCE TRAINING

NOTE: The attached statistical survey is based upon time spent by students in class. It follows the class schedule and not the individual schedules for the various instructors. As with all statistics, it has therefore its limitations.

An illustration for that is the element of critique. The amount of time devoted to this part of the class schedule conveys a most inaccurate picture of the emphasis given to detailed criticism of the trainees' work. Each instructor is spending, depending upon his particular field, from 10 to 50 hours on critiquing the various written assignments of the trainees. In addition, the instructors have frequent individual contacts with the trainees which are used to critique the particular shortcomings of the individual's work. The hours appearing on the schedule present therefore only a small percentage of the actual time spent on critiques.
